Role Of Jamiaati Islami In Bangladesh War

A senior leader of Bangladesh's largest religious political party, the Jamaat-e-Islami, has resigned, citing the party's failure to apologize for its role in supporting Pakistani military 50 years ago. Jamaat-e-Islami party vows to deepen the role of Islam in Bangladesh after Abdul Quader Mollah is hanged for war crimes. Associated Press, Dhaka, Fri, 13 Dec 2013, 08:50 EST.

First published on Fri, 13, he joined Islami Chatra Shibir, the student wing of Jamaat, in 1990. He was the president of Nilphamari district Islami Chatra Shibir. He further said he had confusion on the role of Jamaat in the liberation war of Bangladesh and after the resignation of Barrister Razzak, he realized that Jamaat-e-Islami is an anti-liberation party.

The rift between the young and senior leaders of the Jamaat-e-Islami has widened further over renaming the party and apologizing to the nation for its role during the liberation war. The party, Jamaat-e-Islami Bangladesh, a political party advocating for incorporating Islamic ideology into state system from the early 1930s, was formed with an objective of launching an Islamic movement in India. Bangladesh Jamaat-e-Islami Bengali, previously known as Jamaat-e-Islami Bangladesh or Jamaat for short, is the largest Islamist political party in Bangladesh.

On 1 August 2013, the Bangladesh Supreme Court declared the registration of the Bangladesh Jamaat-e-Islami illegal, ruling that the party is unfit to contest. Bangladesh Jamaat-e-Islami is now under pressure following its central leader Abdur Razzak's resignation over the party's failure to seek apology for its role during the liberation war and bring reforms in the party. The party, insiders say, is reassuring grassroots leaders and activists of launching a new organization soon.
